iFood attended the World Economic Forum this month to discuss its four new commitments on diversity, inclusion, employability and education.

Uber unsuccessfully opposed a recent decision by the Rio de Janeiro government to require the app transportation company to suspend all vehicles without working air conditioning until it can be repaired.

A COVID-19-era Uber policy to end Uber Pool (a shared travel modality) remains suspended in Brazil, although it has been reinstated in the United States.

There is a significant pay discrepancy between black and white app drivers affected by the education levels of the drivers. The report stresses a regional inequality in the remuneration of this profession.

Customers often abuse app delivery drivers with physical threats and racist attacks. In response, drivers give them a bololô. They gather around delivery addresses to drive around in circles, revving their bikes and chanting "justice."
